Module 3 Lesson 2

Lodging

At the end of the lesson, the students will be able to request information about lodging and accommodations. Under this Terminal Learning Objective, the students will be able to:

1. Find a place to stay. This task will include:
    - Extract information about housing from the ads
    - Specify what kind of accommodations you need
    - Discuss renting a house, apartment, room
    - Rent an apartment for you and your family
    - Understand the terms of rental agreement

2. Make a hotel reservation. This task will include:
    - Give and seek information about where the nearest hotel is
    - Ask for rates and hotel facilities
    - Ask about room accommodations
    - Request size of rooms and amenities
    - Reserve a room in a hotel
    - Register for a room in a hotel

3. Operate a household. This task will include:
    - Name pieces of furniture
    - Give a description of the appliances
    - Describe useful appliances
    - Discuss type of rooms, furniture, and appliances
    - Discuss the physical conditions of the house
    - Describe maintenance problems
    - Talk about household chores
    - Compare living arrangements
    - Discuss utility costs
    - Interpret the use of cleaning services for non-speakers

> Tip of the Day
> Regardless of how much you like your potential house, it is very important to ask about the condition of your neighborhood in the rainy season before you sign a lease. The lack of adequate infrastructure sometimes makes certain neighborhoods hard to access during the monsoon season. Traffic jams in Bangkok is another important factor that you should keep in mind before making a decision where to live.

□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□ The teacher let the students go home.

4. “so as to be …”

[illegible] Please fill out the form correctly.

[illegible] Listen carefully and don’t ask again.

5. Preposition “to”

[illegible] He sits turning his back to me.

6. Used with other verbs:

[illegible] The mother teaches her children to cook.

[illegible] The father teaches his children to swim.

[illegible] Cigarettes are harmful to your health.

[illegible] (cause someone to be …) You speak so loud, it frightens the children.

([illegible]) [illegible] Let us know each other as friends instead.

[illegible] The teacher said not to do (it) that way.

“[illegible]” VS “[illegible]” : For

1. Used as a conjunction, means “in order to”; “for (the purpose of)”

[illegible]

I’ll walk to save the money (spent on a taxi).

[illegible]

I’ll help you so that the work gets done faster.

2. Used as a preposition, means “for (the sake of)”.

[illegible] He works for (the sake of) his family.

[illegible] Who do you speak for?

3. [illegible] Water here is not suitable for drinking.

[illegible] Is this book for me?

[illegible] "to put", "to keep safely"

This occurs mostly as a secondary verb to emphasize the idea of 'keeping safely". It is almost invariably used after the word [illegible] 'to keep' and also follows a number of other primary verbs.

[illegible]…[illegible]	[illegible]
	I can't remember where I put the book.
[illegible]…[illegible]	[illegible]
	Keep the camera here.
[illegible]…[illegible]	[illegible]
	May I leave the message?
[illegible]…[illegible]	[illegible]
	Where did you park the car?

Housing

Older Bangkok residents lie in separate, private houses, located either in high-density neighborhoods or, increasingly rare, in relatively spacious compounds in long-established residential areas like Dusit and Bangkapi. The Sukhumvit Road area is predominantly a middle-class residential section.

Outlying residential districts continue to expand rapidly as more housing estates are built to accommodate both the flow of migrants converging on the capital from the upper country and the new generation of young married couples who are increasingly leaving their parents' homes for places of their own. Rising land values, however, are producing new housing concepts, especially in the more congested inner city. More and more Thais are moving into " town house" projects. Hundreds of these projects have been constructed in the city, some consisting of several dozen units in an area that once contained a single dwelling. Western-style apartment buildings are inhabited mainly by foreigners where rent is beyond the reach of many average citizens.

As the 1990's got underway, the biggest residential boom was in condominium construction. An important factor in the sale of condominium units has been a desire to escape the traffic jams which add hours to suburban commuting times.

Throughout Bangkok, lining main roads and side streets, are innumerable two-three-and four-story shop houses which contain specialty shops, restaurants, or small factories that are generally family concerns. Workers and family are commonly housed on upper floors. Such dwellings rarely have recreational space or gardens, though imaginative roof-top plantings can be glimpsed on some. Automobiles are generally parked inside on the ground floor and children play on the sidewalks outside. Poorer people often live in single-story houses made of scrap lumber, concentrated around the port area and in certain suburbs. Government public housing usually takes the form of low rise blocks of simple flats located throughout the city.

The rapid growth of Bangkok has severely strained its facilities and led to a number of serious problems. The city now has over a million registered motor vehicles and because of the limited road surface traffic congestion is heavy in downtown areas. Moreover, some parts of the city are sinking due to the pumping of water from artesian wells to supply suburban projects and drainage is inadequate in others; both have resulted in periodic flooding during the rainy season. Check this out before you sign a lease!

Hotels

Large hotels in Bangkok and other big cities in Thailand meet the Western standard of living and beyond. However, in cheaper hotels and guest houses, especially in provincial areas, you may find rooms without a western- style toilet and a large earthenware water jar with a small bowl for Thai-style bathing. Hotel rooms will either be air-conditioned or have a ceiling fan (□□□□□). An important thing to check when checking into a provincial hotel room is the state of the mesh screens (□□□□□□□) on the windows used to prevent mosquitoes from getting in. If it is in bad shape, mosquitoes will emerge from nowhere to feast on you in the middle of the night.

Hotel prices do not include meals unless it is a package tour. Often there is a coffee shop in the hotel where you can order both Thai and Western food. If it is a large hotel, it may have a number of restaurants too.

It is worth pointing out that many cheap hotels double as brothels and even many of the cheaper ‘straight’ hotels are used primarily for assignations. So, if you are greeted by a puzzled look when you arrive alone and ask for a room for a week, you have probably chosen the wrong hotel!

A typical Village home built on stilts in the rural area.

Modern, middle class families live differently from families in rural villages.

Module 3 Lesson 2

Activity 1 (Class Work)
Look around your classroom and decide what could to be more comfortable and enjoyable. One student writes the list on the board and each student suggests at least one item.

Activity 2
Choose the English translation of each sentence you hear.

1. a. Here are my car keys.
   b. Where is my key?

2. a. You have room 17 on the first floor.
   b. You have room 17 on the second floor.

3. a. I'm looking for a single room with a bath.
   b. I'm looking for a single room with a shower.

4. a. I always stay on the ground floor.
   b. I never stay on the ground floor.

5. a. May I see your ID card?
   b. May I see your passport?

Activity 3
Unscramble these letters to form Thai words denoting pieces of furniture, rooms, and appliances. Also supply the classifier for each of these words.
